HopeWorks’ mission is to support and advocate for people in Howard County affected by sexual and intimate partner violence and to engage the community in creating the change required for violence prevention.

The Editorial Board

Vanita Leatherwood
EDITOR

Erin Reid
EDITORIAL ASSISTANTS

MC Carey
Victoria Rain
Sandra Price
EDITORIAL COMMITTEE

DR. DENISE BOSTON
SPECIAL GUEST EDITOR

HOPEWORKS
9770 Patuxent Woods Drive, Suite 300
Columbia, Maryland 21046
Phone: 410.997.0304

Hours
Monday – Friday
9:00 a.m. – 5:00 p.m.

Web
HopeWorksOfHC.org

Facebook
www.facebook.com/HopeWorksOfHC

Instagram
www.instagram.com/HopeWorksOfHC

24-Hour Helpline
410.997.2272

COVER ART: Dream Counting by Karen Crouse

DISCLAIMER

The artistic expressions in this publication are those of the individual authors and artists and do not necessarily reflect the philosophies, position or policies of HopeWorks.

“Insight, I believe, refers to the depth of understanding that comes by setting experiences, yours and mine, familiar and exotic, new and old, side by side, learning by letting them speak to one another.”

- Mary Catherine Bateson
It is not by chance that our arts magazine is entitled Dragonfly. The dragonfly has been a centuries old symbol for change – a special type of transformation, one wrought from crisis but ending in self-realization and liberation. This experience is often reflected in the lives of the people we serve at HopeWorks, and you’ll hear it in some of the voices on the pages to follow.

At HopeWorks, we use the arts in three important ways to accomplish our mission: to support survivors in their healing; as a vehicle to increase awareness; and to imagine creative solutions to bring about social change.

Transformation is rarely easy and as humans, we sometimes feel so very limited in how to bare the intensity of our experiences, thoughts, and feelings. Congratulations to each of our contributing artists who were brave enough to articulate their own deep emotions and unique perspectives.

Vanita Leatherwood, M.A., TLA
HopeWorks of Howard County
Director of Community Engagement
Dragonfly Founder/Editor

HopeWorks is Howard County’s sexual and intimate partner violence center. We are here for our clients completely. And we are agents of change. Hope builds momentum and momentum creates change...when we work together.
Title | Page
---|---
Overhead by Judith Goedeke | 3
Mocking Bird by Ari King | 4
Begin Again by Judith Goedeke |
Prayers by Lore Nissley | 5
Injured Wing by Jennifer A. Garcia |
Mushroom Fae by MC Carey | 6
The Watcher by MC Carey | 7
Rights by Marian O. Nance | 8
Say Something by Michelle Petties | 11
A Walk in the Woods by Karen Crouse | 12
Dream Counting by Karen Crouse | 13
To Catch the Light by KB Ballentine | 14
Again by Tom Balles |
Primary Care by Dallas Atlas |
US Gymnasts Testify Against the FBI’s Handling of Larry Nassar by Frances Mortimer | 15
Haiku 3 by Debora McCallum |
Untitled by Renee Kalu | 16
Untitled by Renee Kalu | 17
Peachy Dahlia by Gary Clark | 18
When Time and Place Collide by Hilda Flike Jacobson |
The Offering by Autumn Centofonti | 19
HopeWorks by Arlita Holland |
Prayer To the In Between By Caryn Mirriam-Goldberg | 20
Spread Your Wings by Sheela Becton | 21
Old Family Recipe by William Lowe | 22
Haiku 2 by Debora McCallum |
Looking for Love by Mike Clark | 23
Family Dinner by William Lowe |
But We Won’t Speak of That by Christine Allen | 24
Strength and Balance by Leilani Nance | 25
born boi by Dallas Atlas |
Union by Frances Wertimer | 26
A Crooked Candle by Lyn Ford | 27
Seasons by M.E. Williams | 28
Hand in Hand by Leilani Nance | 30
Haiku 1 by Debora McCallum |
When It’s Time to Leave the Station by Millie Grove | 31
Fugitive Bride by Frances Wertimer | 32
Chaotic Harmony by Frances Wertimer | 33
In Dependence by Christine Allen | 34
Hoe to Housewife—I am transformed by Jalisa Hardy |
Between the Shadows by Leilani Nance | 35
Dreaming by Korellia Schneider | 36
Finding Your Light by Leilani Nance | 37
Not My Shame by Michelle Petties |
Beautifully Mended by Kelli Smith | 38
Both by Hilda Flike Jacobson |
Painting Woman by Ming Xu | 39
Lift Your Feet by Barbara Weisser | 40
You are My Peace by Leilani Nance | 42
Section G by Tom Balles | 43
Homegoing by Sandra Price | 44
Sun Setting After Storm by Karen Crouse |
The Priest by Jeana Lovelace | 45
Love Is Not Patient by Miriam Laufer |
Birds on a Wire by Diane Dunn | 46
Cadaques by Diane Dunn |
No Secret by Helga Kidder | 47
Promise of Light by Helga Kidder |
This is Not the Easy Poem to Write by Caryn Mirriam-Goldberg | 48
Consent by Lore Nissley |
Lady in Red No. 1 by Greg Schuler | 49
Woodland Reflections by Diane Dunn | 50
What is the Temperature Today by Autumn Centofonti | 51
Japanese Garden: In Search of Healing by Helga Kidder | 52
Without Asylum by KB Ballentine |
Home Remedy by Chris Wood | 53
Untitiled by Aljaii Hoff |
Chaos Goes to School by Aissatou Sunjata | 54
Flora and Fauna by Anna Kline and Judas Lackey | 55
Revolutionaries by William Lowe | 56
The Untimely Death of Self-Esteem by Merle Davison | 57
Recovering Process by Carol Cober | 58
Temptation by Helen Clark | 59
Big Small, White Black by Gary Clark | 60
Fountain of Youth by Gary Clark |
Rosemary of Canaan by Ari King | 61
Artists’ Bios | 62
OVERHEAD
BY JUDITH GOEDEKE

beyond a fringe of black trees is infinite night
and masses of shining specks
I inhale bits of constellations stars swirl in my mouth swathe my bones and settle into the folds of small, soft places
I raise my arms cup the moon between my palms feel the shadow’s invisible, gravitational pull its massive density, its familiarity this thin, glass bowl of moon even with its mountains of shadows glows in my hands hold on

hold on

© 2023 Judith Goedeke
Mocking Bird
By Ari King

Shrill squawks and chirps startle me as I sag into the springs of the guest room bed.

Could it be a nightingale?
My mind, sleepless again, turns to thoughts of birds, the creak of my turning in tune with the shrieks shooting through the dark.

Could that really be a nightingale? I recall the Aesop’s image of a small, golden thing haggling through its ornate cage. No, I shudder, not that.

My face turns blue from the light of the screen as I search: “birds in the east coast, in the city who sing at night.”

At home, I was used to the hoot-hoot of owls and the trembling orchestra of peepers and crickets, the occasional scream of a fox, a shot ringing out from the woods, the snore of my bed mate, a cough.

I listen to recordings hoping to make a match, but nothing is quite right. And neither is the bird. Its song is inconstant, mercurial. I can’t pin it down and I feel the familiar aching: it’s not just the unknown but the instability, the inability to connect.

Mocking bird. This must be it. A vocal changeling that lures a mate by light of the full moon. And it is mocking. I pull the fluffy blanket up around my neck and release my phone. It’s dark again.

I hone in on its song, accepting its erratic nature. Listening to every rise and fall, matching it with my breath eyes closing to darkness into darkness, thankful for the company, thankful for the mocking.

© 2023 Ari King

Begin Again
By Judith Goedeke

pale yellow sky
seeps slowly steadily, forward its searing edge spills everywhere soaks into these words this piece of paper
my pores open like flowers even my heavy old gray stones who have eaten too much float on stray bits of dawn

© 2023 Judith Goedeke
PRAYERS
BY LORE NISSLEY

A good friend says when someone hurts you pray hard for them.
Pray they get everything you want for yourself.

I tried.
I mixed the spit and the mud, rubbed the salve on your eyes

I tried to be the vessel that holds the oil, to anoint you with all you are missing

I took you to the rock.
I struck it open until the waters rushed

I made my body a prayer, dwelled in your dark Gethsemane folded your burdens in my hands

You would not see.
You would not heal,
You would not drink,
You would not kneel,

But at his urging I’ll try again.

I pray for you a full accounting,
the fearless inventory if you will,
I pray you find peace in the dark and mercy in the morning,

That when you recognize you were loved and you wrecked it, that you can swallow that without the choke

I pray you learn that the hands on your throat are usually your own

And then let go.
© 2023 Lore Nissley

INJURED WING
BY JENNIFER A. GARCIA

Beautiful butterfly tries to fly high,
But with an injured wing can only go nigh,
She flaps and flaps and flaps,
but goes sideways instead of up,
So often not the direction she chose,
Because injured wing hinders where she goes,
She flitters about from flower to flower,
Sipping sweet nectar to give her power,
Yet what she gets is not what she needs,
She needs freedom not to follow leads,
Freedom to soar to the highest of heights,
Freedom to be whoever she desires,
Freedom to express herself how she sees fit, Freedom to be loved for who she truly is.

© 2023 Jennifer A. Garcia
MUSHROOM FAE
BY MC CAREY

© 2023 MC Carey
THE WATCHER
BY MC CAREY

© 2023 MC Carey
I have rights.
The 19th amendment gave me the right to vote.
This was not willingly relinquished, please note.
Arduously, we fought despite our fears.
But it shouldn't have taken over 40 years.
I have rights.
I have a right to reproductive justice.
And I thought I had a right to an abortion.
It said so in Roe VS Wade for a while.
Whether I am married, single or a child.
You can't just rape me,
Abuse me,
Kidnap me,
Traffic me, Harass me, or Pimp me.
So says Title 7 & Title 9
I have rights.
I have a right to be free of violence.
And to break free of this atrocious silence.
To take affirmative actions through defection, election, projection, and connections.
And all to establish stronger protections.
To block legal and unconstitutional government opponents.
Forever and not just in the heat of the moment!
I have rights.
Check the Equal Pay Act of 1963.
It states I have a right to equal pay for equal work.
It makes economic sense,
I can't understand why it took so long to commence.
    I have a right to a non-traditional job,
That pays higher than those meant for my gender.
    Who under this patriarchal system surrendered.
I deserve the right to an economic wellbeing in the workplace.
    And to be protected in a hazardous workspace
    I have rights.
I have a right not to be barred from advancement,
    Or not to be fired because I’m pregnant.
For an invalid reason that is so blatant,
    I have a right to question your intention.
Despite my young children or my religion.
    Let it be universally known,
I have a right to work outside my home.
    I have rights.
I have the right to be inclusive and creative
    And without sexual harassment.
At every level in the world of entertainment.
    Without being beholden,
I can be actor, writer, filmmaker, director,
    Or lead in any other field for that matter.
Without serving myself up on a platter.
    I have rights.
For decades I have waited.
    Has my right to choose faded?
I have a right to autonomy,
    To not be held down by heteronomy.
I'll not be coerced, bullied, or taunted
    For exercising my right to choose.
Simply because yours are not my views.
    I have rights.
For full equity, I forced a metamorphosis.
I stood up & marched when it was dangerous.
Communicator, activator, and primary navigator,
    To realign government and legislature.
Ignited and united for years, days, and many an hour
To bring the message of justice by providing structural power.
  State by state, I am a warrior and message carrier,
  I used the constitution to dismantle legal barriers.
    Without using my fist,
  I am an activist awakening world consciousness.
  I reached a pinnacle and where it was possible,
Used Federal Statues to strike down legal obstacles.
  Intentionally bringing on a gender mutiny,
  Forcing the Supreme Court to heighten scrutiny.

So why don't I feel equal on Women's Equality Day?
  Instead, I feel an ongoing struggle for my rights.
    Why isn't the end of this fight in sight?
      I still feel pain and guilt.
  Despite all the hopes I've built.
    When so many forces seem to intervene differently
  This movement hardly concludes in a way that matches my political proclivity.
    My jangled nerves are not assuaged.
For most of all, what I feel is heightened rage.
  I have rights. Yes. You and me

  To true equality.

© 2023 Marian O. Nance
If you see spinach or some matter, foreign or domestic, in my teeth, tell me.
If my fly is open for all to see, warn me, please.
If you see something creepy and crawlly up, down, or across my back, swat it off.
If you see that crusty morning crud in the corner of my eye, pass me a tissue.
If you see the back of my skirt inadvertently tucked up or tucked in, lend me a hand.
If I forget my deodorant, slip a sistah the Secret.
If you see a telltale red spot staining the back of my pants or skirt, cover me.
If you see something dangling from my nose, that’s not a ring, do the right thing.
If you see my black slip hanging below my white dress, whisper in my ear.
If you see my wig crooked and cocked, give me the straight heads up.

If You See Something, Say Something.
If my one chin has turned into two or three,
If you see rolls of extra weight gathering around my back, stomach, arms, and thighs,
If you see me struggling to walk across the street,
If it’s a chore for me to take the stairs, take a seat, or touch my feet,
If I am stressed out, burnt out, and busting out of clothes that are tight, tighter, and tightest,
If my smiling denials do not hide my defeat,
If my energy is lagging, yet my appetite raging,
And if I am living to eat instead of eating to live,
If I say everything is alright and yet you see everything is all wrong,

MIND YOUR DAMN BUSINESS.

© 2023 Michelle Petties
A WALK IN THE WOODS

BY KAREN CROUSE
DREAM COUNTING
BY KAREN CROUSE

© 2023 Karen Crouse
TO CATCH THE LIGHT
BY KB BALLENTINE

The burden of hope faces the dark, kisses the shadows
with melodic sparks.
Hope feathers and blurs
the roughest of stones, the ragged patches
nestling close to the bone.
What spills from our lips will soar to the heart like a homing pigeon or a poison-tipped dart.
Night lingers and strangles, provokes us to dreams.
Are we trapped, are we lost?
Is all as it seems?
When hope colors the sea,
the depths of our minds,
we can embrace the wonder or gouge ourselves blind.

© 2023 KB Ballentine

AGAIN
BY TOM BALLES

Pain is the cut time the bandage suffering the story we tell a wound heals bandage falls away and the story tell the story
as long as you need then find a new one

© 2023 Tom Balles

PRIMARY CARE
BY DALLAS ATLAS

a new doctor questions / how someone so young & untouched / by combat / could have PTSD / out of habit
I unzip my skin / hold open / & wait / this new doctor wearing another doctor’s shoes becomes Steve from Blue’s Clues / this has to happen / if this doctor doesn’t see / layers of desecrated skin / piled in peaked ash from pelvis to sternum / singed nervous system / crop circles coating every inch of innards / matching the swirling maps / of stronger-than-mine fingers / congealed semen / bubbling like cancerous tumors / crotch-less toddler’s onesie / dangling by the foot from my throat / how else would this doctor know to believe me?

© 2023 Dallas Atlas
US GYMNASTS TESTIFY AGAINST THE FBI’S HANDLING OF LARRY NASSAR
BY FRANCES WERTIMER

HAIKU 3
BY DEBORA MCCALLUM

Are we all safe now
With everything we went through Future will heal us

© 2023 Debora McCallum
UNTITLED
BY RENEE KALU

© 2023 Renee Kalu
UNTITLED

BY RENEE KALU
WHEN TIME AND PLACE COLLIDE

by HILDA FLIKE JACOBSON

I haven’t told you
That every full moon
I picture us laying
In the grass like fallen stars
Our eyes longing
For the dark ether again
And our palms sharing
The glow we stole from it Between them

© 2023 Hilda Flike Jacobson
THE OFFERING

BY AUTUMN CENTOFONTI

© 2023 Autumn Centofonti
HOPE WORKS
BY ARLITA HOLLAND

Speaking truth
My sister by my side
Finding my truth
In the words she speaks
She shines a light,
So I can see my brilliance

Her story is my story,
Wrapped in hopefulness
She knows the depths of my pain
She inspires me to heal,
She believes in my innate power
To transform my mind
Her words burn through the layers
Of my unspoken pain,
Melting away the invisible bars,
Held in place by phantom memories
Of a little girl’s pain.
She is me and I am her,
Moving mountains with one voice,
Speaking truth to the lies
We were once forced to believe.

Hand in hand, we rise together
Breaking chains of fear
That once held us in darkness
Rising from the Bogs
Of self hatred and confusion
Opening our eyes to the beauty
Of self love and compassion
Turning our backs on yesterday’s pain,
We rewrite our stories
We choose to heal.

PRAYER TO THE IN BETWEEN
BY CARYN MIRRIAM-GOLDBERG

Praise the green intrusion as it backs and forths itself for weeks, as if it’s a question who will take over the narrative in spring.
Glory be to the surprise snow in April,
and a hard freeze kills the possibility of peaches from the two volunteer trees scrambling out of the compost pile.
Lamentations for those winter-killed in garden or living room. May they not linger in the in between but go where the warming ground wants them.
Hallelujah to the deer walking right up up to the field camera we set in the woods to show us one large right eye holding the reflection of all seasons at once.
Thanks for this tilt-a-whirl of clocks and weather, and again, as if it has extra time on its hands, prayers to the sky to help us.
SPREAD YOUR WINGS
BY SHEELA BECTON

As I heal, I look within
I am strong and full of dreams
My dreams soon find wings
A new journey begins
I stand tall and look up to the sky
Spread my wings and soar high

© 2023 Sheela Becton
OLD FAMILY RECIPE
BY WILLIAM LOWE

Begin with one egg, whole, in a warm, moist bowl, add a dash of lust and a tablespoon of sperm, knead and let sit for eight to ten weeks, bake for seven months on a medium setting, let fully rise and remove gently with gloves, wipe the glossy coat clean and wrap in gauze, hold close and suckle regularly until satiated, remove waste as needed and disinfect daily, feed, clothe, bathe, soothe, punish, repeat, instruct, guide, reprimand, coddle, rebuke, work methodically to become superfluous, shame as befitting the age, time, and place, transport, teach, tether, tighten the hold, release, watch, fret, fear, and worry, wait for returns that transpire in less and less frequent intervals, calls that come like bottled tongues in the night, pass on the recipe, the mantle, the role, observe from a distance, rejoice, regret,

serve hot, serve warm, serve cold.

© 2023 William Lowe

HAIKU 2
BY DEBORA MCCALLUM

Memories are kept Spilling from an ancient heart
Sewing ties that bind

© 2023 Debora McCallum
FAMILY DINNER
BY WILLIAM LOWE

Family dinners, served promptly at six, are fraught—the lessons taught that parents are at poles of a two-headed beast (the rectangular table), that words are knives that cut through steaks of the heart, that bread and bones are both made to be broken, that silence is a gift and the only grace at this table, that fat must be trimmed and fed slight-of-hand to the dogs (when the two heads are turned), that greens are a curse to be hurled out the door, that dreams are like sweets that dissolve on the tongue, that to be in a family is to be in a war, with napkin entrenchments, fork bayonets, spoons of artillery (let those peas and beans fly), with no armistice, no quarter, no peace in sight—take cover, children: swallow, digest, retreat, survive.

© 2023 William Lowe

LOOKING FOR LOVE
BY MIKE CLARK

looking for love begins with self reflection that we are the lights in the universe so vast that meaning begins in discovering ourselves.

© 2023 Mike Clark
Green yellow lights, breasts darting toward some unknown allowance, some cache of spiked heels, sore calves short skirts. We question the hands that traipse up up up up.

I want home—I feel the pain in painted faces in why why. What tears such lovely woman eyes, what grimace tells the story inside our hands? We imagine tomorrows, breathless and spent, we fugitive homeless of the Y who have come out to play to dance at the Corumba.

I, discomforted, homeless, legally homeless homed

and home at last, behind the iron gate, inside the love of stories that wander

and hope. Inside Building B, tucked together in a bunkbed, my daughters wake

with a frightened glance. Shh, I’m home. I kiss their warm soft foreheads then wander falsely bright halls. Outside the life-sized windows of the new building, the old building

suffers rusty bulldozers earthmovers, a skiff of February snow. Half raised an empty stage of cafeteria of haunted halls and doors open shut, broken windows promising the dead

a true or truish vanishing.
Murals exposed, notes

still push-pinned to cork board, painted walls comfort ghostly hands.

I wonder, how many women how many children called the old Y home to flee or battle husbands boyfriends or brothers to negotiate or subject fathers who father with fists and ire? How many women paced long into night

CONTINUED
their children waiting their children watching in gun-shy wonder?

Some of us have left or will leave soon. One woman went back to “her man” last week.
He shot her in the face.
Some of us will sneak off to dance again and some of us might not dance another day.

© 2023 Christine Allen

---

cornflower confetti. periwinkle penis. azure amniotic // cerulean sac. sonogram snapshots showing length between legs. Dominican mother of mother hides cutlery under cushions. spoon is girl. knife for boy. mother sits on knife. every time. knife. knife. knife. knife. boy. baby is boy. a son to rejoice.
white baby boy for white father. another john where half the tree of family holds juans. but baby bursts out iris. orchid. lavender labia // mauve majora. length between legs merely fingers tricking technicians. forgetting science of superstitions, parents hold white child and name a girl’s name. stripping blue from memory. Dominican mother of mother, who loves only boys, loves new baby most. baby grows to sleep with knife under pillow.

© 2023 Dallas Atlas
UNION
by FRANCES WERTIMER

© 2023 Frances Wertimer
A CROOKED CANDLE

BY LYN FORD

A candle, forgotten, reshaped by use and time,

Is found in a dusty cellar,

The aged wax form bent but unbroken,

The wick unfed, hungering for a nourishing spark.

Wipe it clean, warm it in a gentle oven, and

The candle softens.

Drawn from the heat, it rests, not long.

Untouched, untended, it becomes brittle again.

Tenderly urge it upright, with patience and care.

Hold it steady and let it cool.

The candle will not be perfect. It will not be as sturdy

As a newly purchased taper,

Snugly wrapped in plastic,

Sides smooth, body erect, untouched.

Old wick is touched with new fire,

Liquid runs down

Preserved trails of a melted past,

The essence that slowly passed like tears long ago.

Slightly bowed, revealing age and wear,

Its reason for existence is renewed.

This candle spares the reader’s eye,

Gives courage to the writer’s pen,

Casts safe shadows, offers hope, gives light.

The candle claims the flickering of what was,

Transformed to a new flame.

A crooked candle still burns.

© 2023 Lyn Ford
Part 1: Summer

When I’m asked about my first memory, I lie.

Sometimes I say it’s the feeling of excitement in the air on the day my brother was born, or something about the smell of apples or crayons, or the olive green color of my first home by the lake.

But it’s not.

The earliest picture ingrained in my mind is the orange yellow glow of the sun as it shines through the window on my left and I am helpless, on my back, feeling myself torn open by a man whose job was to help me.

When I’m asked about my memories of childhood summers, I lie.

How can it be that while everyone else looks back they see joy, and play, and warmth, and love?

I wish I could remember that. I wish I remembered going through life with childlike joy and wonder instead of responsibility and guilt.

I wish that summertime brought back good thoughts, like sunny beaches and the smell of forests and how those great lakes must have felt on my skin.

But do you know what I remember instead?

I remember the way one man looked at me through a window, locking eyes with mine and sending a permanent chill down my spine.

I remember that one man shared secret photos of my preteen body with another man, and that one stared at my breasts across the dinner table every single day.

I remember how another man, a stranger, found me on a bus, harassed me, touched me, and kissed me.

And yet another man four times my age touched me in a bathroom, locked me in a bedroom, and forced me to stare out the window at the children playing outside, and “think about what I did.”

I remember that the first man I trusted told me he loved me, then assaulted me in a car, and on a trampoline, and on the phone every night, and in the yard in broad daylight as I lay there bleeding.

And the first man I loved more than anything in this world left me.

It’s been a long time, but I still feel alone.

So, so alone.

Part 2: Fall

I know one day I will recover again, but today I am relapsing again.

I’ve been trying so hard to stay present with the smell of bonfires and cinnamon tea, and I’ve been staring at the oaks as they shed their pasts and transform the earth with their new colors.

CONTINUED
But I can’t enjoy them.

I’m not here.

Summer has ingrained itself into my body and I cannot escape.

All I want is to feel the cool breeze on my face and the crunching leaves under my feet, but all I can feel is that blinding light and those hands,
    all those hands,
and that gaze,
    and those bruises.

How can I explain that the only thing I can feel is pain and the only time I feel like I’m here is when I make myself bleed?

I don’t know who I am without this and I hate them for taking me away from myself.

Part 3: Winter
It’s January 3rd, 2022.

Seasons have passed,
and so far I have kept my promise to stop hurting myself on purpose.

But you know what they say about the body keeping score, and even now,
decades of old and new memories hide deep inside my bones,
in all my nerves and tissues, waiting for their time –
    at yoga,
at home,
the car,
the bed,
the office,
    – unpredictably.

In the middle of winter, I’m frozen in summer again, and where I don’t have words, I still remember it all.

I remember how it felt to be touched and then punished, loved and then abandoned.
Over and over and over.

My therapist says
that our deepest feelings and memories emerge when we’re finally still and safe.

That doesn’t feel fair to me.

But maybe she’s right.

I guess it’s true that I could not be further from summer, and something about the safety and stillness of winter gives me a bit of hope.

I’m not there yet,
but maybe one day
    the shivers down my spine won’t be as strong,
and maybe one day
    I’ll be able to drive down that road,
    and hear those songs,
and maybe, maybe I’ll even get a good night’s sleep.

And maybe one day I’ll believe that even though those memories are stored
in all my nerves and tissues,
they aren’t me.
Maybe one day
I’ll be brave enough to use my voice and tell the truth.

Part 4: Spring
Today is an important anniversary.
And so is ten days from now,
and four days after that,
and a few days this summer,
but I can’t remember when.

I’ve found that no pill or drink or group or meditation

CONTINUED
will stop the seasons and their memories from visiting, but that means that even in the darkness of winter,
I can trust
that spring will always come again too.

I’m not sure what it is,
but there’s something beautiful about today.

The cerulean sky is the perfect backdrop for the tiny white flowers, growing on branches that could have been mistaken for dead only a few months ago.

The birds have found their way back home and I’ve been watching them, mesmerized by their fearlessness
as they build their nests and proudly sing songs that only they understand.

The sun has been staying a little longer lately, and I’m learning to cultivate a garden with the springtime rains.

And every time
I taste the sweetness of a berry or a tea that I grew with my own hands,
I get a little closer to believing that I can create a home and a life full of color where there was nothing before and it can be so, so sweet.

I’ve been thinking a lot lately.

I think, despite everything,
the world is still good, seasons and all,
and I think I will be okay.

I think that the bright orange yellow sun, as it hovers over the horizon and floods the world with its warmth, is my new favorite color.
The universe saw fit to build me like a train station
as I am ready for someone to go.
But I am ready for someone to come by, too.

The time zone I live in is temporary.
I live my life by the seat of my pants,
the edge of my seat,
the edge of the counter where the ball is about to drop,
the glass is about to break,
the train is about to scream its farewell and leave the station as they all do.

When I was first asked to tell time
I couldn’t see from today to tomorrow.
I was too young to understand the biggest difference between “beginning” and “end” is all that space in between.

But it didn’t take me long to learn.

A clock face for my grandfather,
a clock face for my great aunt,
a clock face for my grandmother-

A clock face
for my fourteen year old best friend.

A clock face for a boy who smiled at me when no one else did;
who climbed through my window to remind me “not alone”
when I needed him.

A clock face for a girl I never spoke to just held the hand of another girl, crying into her lap,

while her friend breathed with tubes, and monitors beeped along their relentless search for any sign of activity under all those machines.

All these frozen faces
that’ll never point towards another dawn.
Sometimes
I wonder how I’m supposed to live with a halfway completed suicide pact on my hands.
Sometimes
I wonder what those I’ve lost would’ve done.

I don’t know how death makes it choices
I don’t know why it swarms me like flies.
I don’t know why good people with so much more life in them than I have in me were snuffed out.
I don’t know how the girl who didn’t plan to live is the woman writing this poem now.

All I know is that someday
I, too, will get on a train.
I will leave the station
I will scream my farewell
I won’t have to wait for the glass to break anymore when it’s already broken.
FUGITIVE BRIDE
by FRANCES WERTIMER
CHAOTIC HARMONY

BY FRANCES WERTIMER

© 2023 Frances Wertimer
HOE TO HOUSEWIFE — I AM TRANSFORMED

By Jalisa Hardy

Sex was my superpower but also my kryptonite
Bodies, on bodies, on bodies
To cope with the pain of my past
No one saw my pain, just kept calling me fast
It was killing me softly and it wouldn’t let up Getting burnt one time still wasn’t enough
Pregnancy scare after pregnancy scare
I tried to get out felt like God wasn’t there Gave it away so they wouldn’t take it Raped three times as teen, healing I couldn’t fake it
I’m sorry my Lord but prayer wasn’t enough
Had to find the right help to sift through my stuff
Around age 20 I started to talk
People could finally understand the crazy road I’d walk
I thought I was free when he asked to get married
I wasn’t healed, just a lot that I’d buried
My heart’s desires were children and marriage
But it came crashing down like that baby carriage
The cheating, abuse, lies, and gaslighting were more than I could bare
I fought with God told Him this wasn’t fair
I made a life altering decision one that I didn’t see Little did I know that it would bring me back to me
I just wanted out and safety for us all
A single mom of 3 I can’t afford to fall
Partnering with God turned it all around
Now I’m out planting good seeds in the ground
I am transformed, God renewed my mind
I have the peace that I couldn’t find
All of my pain was not in vain
This is my season, a harvest to claim
Out of this world, yes I’m out of this world
I choose to believe that I’m His favorite girl
No need to feel sorry, I sure am not Now that I’ve hit rock bottom, watch me climb to the top!

© 2023 Jalisa Hardy

INDEPENDENCE

By Christine Allen

Loneliness prevails, an irksome force pushing me pressed to that plate-glass window, light pointing through night as a thin irascible finger to a young woman sitting at the smoker’s bench.

Ask for a light, says loneliness, knowing full well we have matches.
The woman, wordless, complies.
Smoke spirals or shudders around us.
I rub or scratch at burgeoning hives
as if I could busy sorrow out with fingernails smelling of ash.

As from a void, snow drifts sideways in clusters, pushing smog to cold gray grounds. In a few hours the snow will tease the thirst of kids who will fidget or fight or sob in line while they wait for the escorts who will walk them to school.

Loneliness concedes. I’m buzzed through the doors with a password, teeth chattering. Graveyard shift take note of the hideous sight of my face disfigured by strain, their own expressions give away empathy or apathy, depending—

© 2023 Christine Allen
BETWEEN THE SHADOWS

BY LEILANI NANCE
DREAMING

BY KORELLIA SCHNEIDER

Some of us grew taller over the summer, but we didn't line up anymore like we used to when the elementary school teachers made us form a row at the back of the class. Most of the towering girls flanked at one end, before the boys went careening toward adolescence. And those of us muddled somewhere in between, catfish hoping not to get caught and filleted by the awkwardness that abounds with growing up.

Some of us traveled, went north to stay in cabins at the mouths of the many lakes studding the frontier. But others had nothing more to document than pure ire for the rampant, shirtless, beer-bellied men playing ultimate frisbee in the neighborhood park until dusk.

When we all reassembled, we didn't exchange words over round tables and soggy pizza about our high-functioning alcoholic parents who peeled themselves off tables and floors every night and morning after a good soaking, to report for duty, to rinse and repeat--the humblest deglazing to behold. Instead, we filled the air with a mundaneness we secretly longed for.

I can mention these things, but it's not a slam-dunk story. The messiness of growing up, growing out, barnacling ourselves to the underbellies of truths that dawn on us decades later, is an ongoing negotiation.

I won't speak for anyone else who sat at that table, but in the absence of clarity, sometimes, the knowing is enough. Space reserved for knowing falls to the left of a sturdy, well-shading oak tree, leaves room for a garden to grow, or even lesser desired vegetation, perspiring with a determination, a moxy that still has currency in some parts.

And even if nothing is built to last, and nothing offers more than a one-year warranty anymore, I might hedge my bets on a hammock strung from this particular branch of eternity, as it is defined by the end-user. Gently swaying over the things that passed me by at first glance, over this anthill that I took such care not to step on, not to deprive of warmth from the setting sun.

All summer long, my neighbor pumped poison into his front property. Green, more green, chlorophyll and fluorescence that burrowed sickly, began to glow in the dark, brighter than the plastic stars with which we populated the ceilings of our bedrooms and our last thoughts before sleep. The buzz of gathering insects and the birds that ate them, come premature dawn, reminded us that perhaps we weren't just dreaming.

© 2023 Korellia Schneider
I am alone.
Shame eases up and in from dark and secret places.
I am cloaked, hiding, drowning, dying in its heaviness.
Beneath the bright shine of a brilliant and risen sun, it disappears.
I proudly stand in the light.
I am not alone.

© 2023 Michelle Petties
I want to be naked with a blanket of security
I want to lay with my limbs exposed without fear of the crows picking at them
I want to be seen and cling to the comfort of invisibility simultaneously
Knowing it's impossible to build a home in purgatory

© 2023 Hilda Flike Jacobson
WOMAN

BY MING XU
Years ago my husband and I lived across the street from my father-in-law. Every day after I sent my kids off to school, I would go see him. He had suffered injury during WWII and could not bend his back to put his socks on, I helped him every morning with his socks; he could slip his loafers on using a shoe horn. I would then go to the store and get him bread or milk, etc.

One day I let myself in as usual and went to his second floor apartment. The TV was not on. It was quiet, He was not in the living room as usual. I looked in the kitchen and bedroom—not there. He did not answer my call out for him. Reluctantly, I looked in the bathroom, I found him slumped over, unresponsive. His face was a sickening shade of purple/blue. Immediately, I knew he was dead. I ran out of there and saw some men at a cafe across the street. I told them about what I saw, and they called 911 for help.

Every night after that as I went to bed, I would see that disturbing vision I had experienced. I tried to fight it but it always came. One night, as I laid down, I said to myself, it's going to come no matter how I fight it. So I said OK, hit me with your best shot. I summoned the image. It was the same as always but it no longer had a horrible effect on me. I never had that scary vision again. I never forgot it but taking control of the situation gave me power over it.

There is one single best page that I ever read in my life. It changed my life for good and forever. I wish I could remember the title, but it is more than 30 years ago now.

The book was recommended to me by a therapist I was seeing. She told me I could request it from Sheppard-Pratt Hospital, and they would lend it for a short time. After I received it, I couldn't even open it for a month. I was afraid. I was afraid to read about my condition. I never could talk about it without being afraid it would spark a new episode.

Call it agoraphobia, panic attacks, anxiety or just depression. What brought the attacks on, I could never say. I would not feel comfortable being away from my house. If I did go out, I couldn't wait to get back home. Several times I abandoned outings and turned for home before I reached my destination.

Unfortunately, getting back home rarely solved the problem. I still suffered the symptoms, but felt better about it if I was in a familiar setting. I rarely had more than three days of peace. Even this peace was marred by my fretting.

When I wasn't in an actual attack, I was worrying about having one. I was constantly checking my current status, checking for signs, worrying about being worried. I was afraid of being afraid.

Fear triggers fight or flight reactions. The heart beats harder and faster. For me, most of the time this was accompanied by tightness in the chest and shallow breathing. I experienced dizziness and a disorienting, 'outside myself' feeling. I felt nausea and frequently did have to heave. Even worse, my bowels often felt the need to move violently. My body wanted to completely rid itself of any digestive responsibility. Several times this was followed by severe, uncontrollable shaking as though shivering.

I suffered these panic attacks for 12 or 14 years.
When it was at its worse, I summoned my sheer determination and willpower, and saw a doctor about my problem. He didn't seem to think any of this was a problem. He told me to, “just go relax myself.” I ran all the way home that day stopping only to throw up in the gutters four or five times.

That doctor gave me the name of a psychiatrist, and I did go see him. After talking with that doctor for about 15 minutes, he wrote me a prescription for what I believe was an antidepressant. I took it faithfully every day. It had absolutely no effect. I still had attacks just as frequently and just as severe.

One day as I felt the scary feelings creep up my spine, I tried to talk to myself about it. I reasoned that I had experienced hundreds of these attacks and I had survived every one. I had not gone and jumped off a bridge. I never hurt anyone or myself. I never completely lost my marbles, or failed to return to myself, which was my worst fear. Whether it lasted twenty minutes or five hours, I always recovered. But I never stopped worrying about the next time. I tried to convince myself that I was obsessing about the fear, and the other symptoms. I can't say that lessened the frequency or the severity, but I did feel slightly better after that.

Before we moved to another area, I made sure the doctor could give three months of the ineffective medicine. Even though I felt it was not helping, I was afraid to run out of it. I tried to get another prescription in the new place, but the doctor said he never heard of that medicine.

Close to running out, I decided to seek another doctor or a therapist. I found a very kind and understanding woman who told me that I was having panic attacks. She said it was quite common. I had never talked to anyone before who remotely understood what was happening to me. She recommended that I request to borrow the book I mentioned above.

When I finally steeled myself enough to open the book and find out just what a hopeless case I was, I read the best page that was ever written for people like me who suffered in silence, fear and shame.

The book told me the same thing I had been trying to tell myself, just in other words. I paraphrase:

If you've never stood in the ocean waves, up to your waist, you'll have to trust me on this, and use your imagination. The ocean is always rushing to shore in waves, pushed by the wind. If you stand in the water up to the waist, the waves can rise up over your head. If you turn your back to the incoming wave, it will come in unseen and push you down on your face. If you stand facing the next wave and tighten yourself, hunched over with your fists up, it will throw you down on your ass. Still the waves keep coming.

Now try to stand relaxed, and get ready for the next wave. Remember that none of the other waves has killed you. I will tell you the secret. As the next wave comes, face it, Turn to face it and get ready for a great feeling. Here it comes; lift your feet. Lift them and float with the wave. Be part of the movement of the wave. Know that even though you are not a fish, you can survive the ocean and even enjoy being alive in it.

Reading the same idea, which was written by an expert, confirmed for me that not fighting the feelings and the anxiety, but allowing it to come as it will, will kill the bogeyman who was always lurking in my mind.
LIFT YOUR FEET continued

Next time I felt that awful feelings were creeping up on me, I turned to face it. I said, “OK, Give me your best shot. You have never destroyed me, and you never will. I have survived everything you can throw at me, and I am still whole.”

I discovered how wonderfully strong I am. It also reminded me that when my FIL died I had done the same thing. Instead of avoiding it, I lifted my feet and let it come.

Shortly after that revelation, my life turned around. The attacks became less severe, less frequent and finally disappeared altogether. Writing about this feels very good to me now. I could not have done it then.

Even though antidepressants can help, sometimes people need an antianxiety medication to get through the worst parts. But eventually, gaining faith in our own strength, will overcome the hopelessness we feel.

I hope that this can help someone else who is suffering and can't find the way out. Hopefully, someone else can learn to trust his or her own strength enough to turn around, face the scary wave, and lift your feet.

© 2023 Barbara Weisser

YOU ARE MY PEACE

BY LEILANI NANCE

© 2023 Leilani Nance
For seven months the fading news print gathered dust on my desk

American Epidemic profiled 13 children killed by gun violence in the US one child is shot every hour of everyday...

Janaria, 15

...one of five students
at her neighborhood high school who were fatally shot in the first half of that year.

Black kids more than four times as likely to die in shootings as white ones...

Alyse, 6 and Ava, 9 killed by their father in a murder/suicide

They had always been each other's best friend... while Ava's first word had been “Dada,” Alyse's was “Ava.”

...but even in death
they were together

for their funeral the girls were nestled in the same white casket their arms wrapped around each other.

White kids much more likely to use guns to take their own lives...

Sterling, 15

Aspired to become a nuclear physicist shot himself in front of three other students

“Life is nothing but a mess,” he'd written in a note.

“Every time I try,
I get less.”

one listens for the rising wail of grief for those we never met whose gifts we never received not knowing if our child will be the next one killed or the next killer

© 2023 Tom Balles
HOMEGOING
BY SANDRA PRICE

© 2023 Sandra Price

SUN SETTING AFTER STORM
BY KAREN CROUSE

© 2023 Karen Crouse
THE PRIEST
By JEANA LOVELACE

She lies in her sick bed
a crucifix on the wall above her she’s dying, quick call the Priest

He will apply
his special holy ointment and she will be blessed because he is the Priest

Mom, dad, we want to get married well, call the Priest and talk to him

We want our baby baptized and raised Catholic time to call the Priest

As the organ music reaches a crescendo
he raises his arms to God resplendent in his special vestments beautiful garments of gold and purple garments meant only for him
because, he is the Priest

You sit in the confessional your face partially hidden you reveal your deep dark secrets to him in hopes for absolution
because he is the Priest

All your life you run to him, trust him,
confide in him
because he is the Priest

Now he is the one who needs absolution finally caught abusing innocent children

He left broken hearts and minds confusion and betrayal
because he was the priest

© 2023 Jeana Lovelace

LOVE IS NOT PATIENT
By MIRIAM LAUFER

Love is not patient, nor must love be kind.
No, love is not some ever fixed mark.
Love is not respect, or integrity.
Love is not forgiveness, or permission.

Love is not a rose, or a cupcake, or a bar of chocolate. Love’s not a ring, or a diamond, or a red convertible.
Love is not a dress, or a day, or a vow.

Love is not a set of requirements,
a magic formula, a recipe,
or points on a metaphorical graph.
No, love is not a sonnet.

Love is you and me on a starry night,
and all the choices we made to be there.

© 2023 Miriam Laufer
BIRDS ON A WIRE
BY DIANE DUNN

CADAQUES
BY DIANE DUNN
Promise of Light
_by Helga Kidder_

Late afternoon, when women rest in the cooling breath of day, mother sat on the wooden bench next to the fence, the sun tilting toward the horizon like a sleepy child.

Black-eyed susans shone gold-leafed and the rich aroma of roses ribboned through the pebbled path. The garden stippled in waning light, some leaves already turning copper.

I sat with mother then. Birds snacked on pyracantha berries, their tiny propellers fluttering back and forth twittering prompts.

Mother’s hands, rosy-red from scrubbing linens and polishing floors for neighbors, were folded in her lap. But when I touched them, they felt soft as if I stroked velvet.

We sat listening to the day’s last words, the birds’ asides, evening air fresh on her worn body, her smile an eternal light flickering in the dark.

© 2023 Helga Kidder

---

No Secret
_by Helga Kidder_

Summer hobbles into fall, slowly sheds her golden cape, exposing goosebumps on skin waking early mornings.

Yesterday we cleared pockets of scrub, pulled spiders’ spit off roses and dahlias, our eyes joyful for blooms.

Why can’t we protect our Earth the way we tend our gardens?

Research documents global warming, niches for polar bears, whales slowly closing as time for protection runs out.

Instead we explore Mars, the red planet, where wheat, corn, and apples can’t grow naturally, where man, without wearing masked suits, can’t survive.

Gravestones point to the sky like scoffers warning of wasted hours, the price we pay for idle hands.

© 2023 Helga Kidder
Not like that night decades ago, riding in her father's convertible up and down hills in the Ozarks, topless, our breasts happy in the sweet air that poured through us thick and variegated, our eyes steady on the yellow line just to the left, Queen Anne's lace to the right, the moon hoisting itself up.

Not like the rare ease of waking too early without exhaustion or rancor, paddling to the kitchen for hot tea and the sound of eggs cracking, his hands smiling as they move from flour-muddied counter to bowl, even the children up early, rifling through the pantry for maple syrup or something sweeter.

This isn't easy as my father's last breath,
a slowing train that stops almost imperceptibly except for the stillness not actually still, then how the rabbi opened the window wide enough for my father's soul to take its full size.

This is what happens after the ending, like when I saw a friend's orange car years after he died, or the 1 a.m. call from the adult child whose voice catches on a “but….,” tumbling in what I can't fix.

The easy poem to live isn't the sidewalk dotted with rain that sucked itself back up when we needed it most. Here I am instead pacing the deck, unable to sleep, the flashlight of my thoughts grappling toward some anchor of assurance in the heat lightning all around.
This is the line I'll write anyway about rain
so hard it amplifies the redness of one bird.

© 2023 Caryn Mirriam-Goldberg

It isn't always a gun.
Sometimes the only weapon needed to take you down is you.

You have laid it all out for him, guided his hands to the broken spots, lifted your chin to bare your pretty throat.

The moment you know what is going to happen

That you won't say no again

You see your whole world turned to glass.
You recognize the hands you used to love turned to the creeping crush that holds it.

You lay yourself down to save it,
let your body take the tantrum.

By morning it never happened.
You fold the clothes and feed the baby,
The world is rock and river again.
You are only one tiny city of ruin.

© 2023 Lore Nissley
WHAT IS THE TEMPERATURE TODAY
BY AUTUMN CENTOFONTI
JAPANESE GARDEN:
IN SEARCH OF HEALING
BY HELGA KIDDER

Why am I here in the cold shadow of the midnight moon?

Pebbles stroked in waves with a rake, a few rocks wedged in feng shui, the garden speaks to me like a calming sea as itch eats my skin in prickles and screams –
scratch me, lotion me,
cool the inferno,
the layering burn.

For decades I milked
my good genes.
Now dreams flurry
my sleep, flakes waking in mugo pine branches needling the sky for answers.

Sipping Sleepytime tea
under the pagoda,
I learn the gravelly road of pain outside in.

© 2023 Helga Kidder

WITHOUT ASYLUM
1981
BY KB BALLENTINE

We laughed into the dark kitchen coming home one night still licking salt and butter from our fingers, debating possibilities of Indiana Jones finding the Ark, just Mom and me, Dad still working out of town.
Heading upstairs to bed, Mom pushed me backwards, hand over my chest like we were in a car about to crash.

I didn't know what she was doing, why she wouldn't speak, only knew something was wrong
as she backed us out the side door to the driveway, stumbled to the neighbor's for his phone.

What I didn't see then was the front-jamb, splintered, door leaning into the stairwell.
Radio, records, television all gone, just empty spaces, strangers' words smeared across the walls,
the music and voice of our family silenced – like my trust in coming home, believing it safe.

How do you live with fear?
When violation contaminates your core, infests your privacy, renders everything untouchable,
when invaders have cracked the heart of your home, exchanging a husk for your heart?

© 2023 KB Ballentine
HOME REMEDY
BY CHRIS WOOD

My body hurled last night’s dinner, fever tipping one hundred two degrees,
and I am alone.
In my delirium,
I feel her presence, cool hand on my forehead, her silhouette shadowing the room, my room, in my grownup house where I am trying to be brave.
I remember her home remedies, hot Jell-O - cherry - my favorite, and saltines around a steaming mug, The only thing that stays down.
The next morning,
I wake to birds singing, the storm of last night over,
and a cup and saucer on my nightstand, only crumbs remain.

© 2023 Chris Wood

UNTITLED
BY ALJALL HOFF

© 2023 Aljall Hoff
CHAOS GOES TO SCHOOL
BY AISSATOU SUNJATA

Chaos

Each week we count young bodies teachers who trade chalkboards for bravery keep score as gun lovers cringe
no one will take their Second Amendment away so their sons learn early how to kill when bullied hiding revenge inside till they go to school one day teach the unthinkable and leave lasting memories of terror screams, blood and death hoping no one he encounters mocked him aim, shoot and taking out a whole class or more many bullets penetrating delicate flesh altered weapons ensure mass slaughter only leveling the once-innocent brick building of learning now, saturated with blood recollections even the walls continue to cry rebuilding on what becomes hallowed ground it will never cease bitter anniversaries each year the day chaos heard the school bell raised its weapon in madness and with an automatic weapon answered questions no teacher or student ever needed to know.

© 2023 Aissatou Sunjata
FLORA AND FAUNA
BY ANNA KLINE AND JUDAS LACKEY

© 2023 Anna Kline and Judas Lackey
REVOLUTIONARIES
For S. Choi
By William Lowe

Do revolutionaries ever laugh unrestrained, let their guards down with mirth in their eyes,
lie naked with a lover and speak sugared words,
eat sweets and let the taste linger on their tongues, feel homesick and long for their mothers, breathe in and hold the scent of a rose,
bathe in the sea and feel cleansed by the tide,

lie in a field and stare at the stars,
make a wish on a star and slip Marx for a time,
think random thoughts when dialectics dissolve,
drink coffee at dawn and gaze out the window,
call up a sister and speak of the time....
sit in a worn chair and feel nothing but home,
embrace contradictions and allow for exceptions,

feel joy when love blooms and grief when it dies,
travel far and embrace wide unknowns, deceive and dissemble, ponder and doubt,
beget children and grant space to grow,
aspire and strive and fall short and fail,
forgive faults in themselves and their friends,
live in the flesh and outside a theory?

Do they laugh unrestrained? Do they cry?

© 2023 William Lowe
THE UNTIMELY DEATH OF SELF-ESTEEM

BY MERLE A. DAVISON

© 2023 Merle A. Davidson
RECOVERYING PROCESS
BY CAROL COBER

I lock all the doors and windows and still do not feel safe.
I know what might happen again,
walking outside at night.
The stories of friends and survivors haunt me for years.
Those who practice violence- steal trust.
Dark harm invades the family circle.
How odd that we once pretended it would be different for us,
that our family would be spared, our lives protected.
I am not alone, in my own fears and losses,
I am standing with so many others hurt and harmed.
Lives changed-in an instant.
Our hope battered we are then awakened to the fragility of peace,
the precariousness of safety.
How does the courage arrive to embrace healing?
How long I wonder will this pain torment me?
Some days support is not enough, to bring ease to my body.
Eventually I become a non-victim, as fear unravels, I am empowered.
Still, I am changed by my losses, never the same again.
The body and heart shifts in a million ways once we know the truth.
Sometimes we can heal find ease and trust again.
When I can feel joy again and be held tenderly,
I find am becoming my authentic, hopeful self.

© 2023 Carol Cober
TEMPTATION
BY HELEN CLARK

Social media has made us all instant reporters, true, but it's also made us into researchers, gathering data on our old friends like slot machine players sitting in rooms with no clocks and stale cigarette smoke air on a beautiful day,
we learn too much about each other without the boundaries good friendships need in order to breathe.

Beware, beware how you use this tool that was meant to connect us (allegedly) beware, beware the loneliness of having a thousand Facebook friends and of judging your friends too harshly for their pedestrian tastes or moral lapses (AKA their humanity), and envying their successes and perfect lives, beware, beware of CEOs who rely on these temptations of our human hearts to make their fortunes.

© 2023 Helen Clark
BIG SMALL WHIE BLACK
BY GARY CLARK

© 2023 Gary Clark

BIG SMALL WHIE BLACK
BY GARY CLARK

© 2023 Gary Clark
ROSEMARY OF CANAAN
BY ARI KING

Tending to Thyme for hope,
Wishing for fears' repose
This daily caring, my comfort Watering till they’ve grown cold.

Too late I realize the secret to their vigor is sun and neglect.

To Rosemary I say, thank you for your wisdom you’ve shown me this:
Through drought and famine
You grow, in a bed of dust
You push forth, under fiery rays
You stand, plump and green pungent and alive.

You give me faith that growing through my desert is also the way for my spirit to thrive.

© 2023 Ari King
ARTISTS’ BIOS

Christine Allen
Christine wrote The Arc and the Sediment, which won a best-novel and best book-length work publication prize from the Utah Arts Council, who also awarded her short-fiction collection There’s Death in the Balloon and poetry collection, Multiple Choice Questions. She has a doctorate from the University of Utah, where she finished a hybrid titled Spolia.

Dallas Atlas
Dallas Atlas (they/he) is a Dominican-American poet currently pursuing their MFA through the Rainier Writing Workshop. You can find him online at dallasatlas.com or on Instagram @madremoca.

KB Ballentine

Tom Balles
Tom is a retired acupuncturist living in Laurel, MD. He was a faculty member at Tai Sophia (now Maryland University of Integrative Health) for 20 years and is the author of Becoming a Healing Presence, Dancing with the Ten Thousand Things, and a poetry chapbook, Under the Hot Lights of the Third Degree.

Sheela Becton
Sheela Becton is a visual Artist based in Silver Spring, Maryland. Her brushwork often tells the story of her memories from life and travels in India, showcasing the richness and beauty of Indian Culture. Her creativity is also inspired by the beauty of nature and a desire to spread positivity. Sheela’s artwork has been shown in Exhibitions in Maryland and include ‘Colors of India’ at Slayton House, Columbia, Maryland, in 2022, and ‘Colors of Nature’ at Brookside Gardens. Sheela’s painting, ‘Soulmates,’ was juried into the Love themed Exhibit at ‘Girls Who Paint’ Gallery in Kensington, Maryland. You can view Sheela’s Art Collections at https://www.sheelacreates.com/ and follow her in Instagram @sheelabectoncreates.

MC Carey
MC Carey (they/them) is a self-taught linoleum block printmaker currently living and creating in Baltimore, MD. MC has been a printmaker for over five years and has run a printmaking studio, Femme Prints, for four of those years. Much of their artwork centers on themes of whimsy, transformation and abundance, LGBTQ+ and body liberation, and afro futurism. MC has attended artist residencies and their work has been showcased in international traveling exhibits and local art galleries.

Autumn Centofonti
The emphasis on strength obtained from experiencing pain can be seen throughout Autumn’s artwork. She currently works as a legal advocate for victims of domestic violence and sexual assault and is finishing up a master's degree in psychology, concentrating on trauma and crisis. She uses art to tell her and others’ stories and to express her deepest emotions.
ARTISTS’ BIOS

Gary Clark
Gary Clark is a local photographer and semi-retired mental health counselor. While he likes capturing the beauty of flowers and landscapes, he loves street and event photography the most. Gary specializes in impromptu portraits of dogs (and their humans), street musicians, and shooting a variety of events with a journalistic perspective.

Helen Clark
Helen Clark is an author, editor, and adjunct English and Journalism professor at Howard Community College. She is also an avid reader, hiker, and nature nerd. Helen enjoys hosting music nights, bead jewelry-making workshops, and creative writing workshops that allow people to create for the joy of it.

Mike Clark
Mike Clark is publisher emeritus and a board member for the Little Patuxent Review, a journal of literature and the arts now in its eleventh year of publishing. Clark previously was a reporter for the Baltimore Sun. He also served three years as editor of a regional publication of the American Friends Service Committee. In 2018, he received the Howie award as a supporter of arts in Howard County. He was awarded the Audrey Robbins award from the Association of Community Services in Howard County for his work that set up a backpack & school supply project for children who lacked the necessary supplies. At that time, he was coordinator of Christ Church Link. He has three adult children and seven grandchildren. His wife, Lois, is a retired adjunct professor at Howard Community College, having taught special education and reading students for ten years.

Carol Cober
Carol is an intuitive process painter and collage artist who works in watercolor, oil, acrylic and photographs. Carol creates art as a way to nourish the capacity to listen within so consider creating spiritual practice as a meditation. This involves seeing tenderly, using non-judgmental eyes to see deeply. Their subject captures abstract moments of awareness and the spiritual expression of deep joy after loss in people. Carol feels we all have the potential to express insights and spiritual messages in our creative expression: art, writing, dance, singing and music making.

Karen Crouse
Karen Crouse is a fine art photographer who sees creating photographs as therapy. She finds the process of taking and editing photographs as a type of meditation and enjoys observing and recording the world around her.

Merle Davison
Merle Davison is a self-taught artist creating figurative sculptures and abstract paintings. Her artistic development has been much like her recovery from childhood trauma and alcoholism - gradual strengthening of clarity and direction. Her artwork’s focus is human emotion; from agony to sublime contentment. If she’s honest, the moments of profound pain are what make sculpting or painting necessary...if, for no other reason, than to access the power these moments have and purposefully re-direct it.
ARTISTS’ BIOS

Diane B. Dunn
Diane Dunn has, over the years, worked in black and white photography, painting (watercolor, acrylic, oil, and pastel), collage, and mono prints. She has recently become enamored with the medium of collage and loves the tactile experience of cutting, tearing and assembling various hand-painted papers and fabrics, often combined with paint. Diane finds a serendipitous aspect to collage that is exciting and is never sure where a piece will lead when she starts. She also enjoys making mono prints, which allow for layering and masking that reveals hidden patterns and images.

Lyn Ford
Storyteller Lyn Ford is grateful for her roots in spoken-word art and the creative narrative passed down in her Affrilachian family. Lyn is an award-winning writer, Ohio teaching artist, certified laughter yoga teacher, international keynote speaker and workshop presenter, and a member of the National Association of Black Storytellers’ Circle of Elders.

Jennifer A. Garcia
Jennifer A. Garcia is a poet who currently publishes her poetry on a monthly basis in the Fulton Living Magazine. Jennifer earned a master’s degree and bachelor's degree in English from Florida International University (http://instagram.com/JenniferGarciaPoet). Jennifer is a Certified Energy Healer, Motivational Speaker, and Founder of Spiritual Spectra. Spiritual Spectra is a spiritual and holistic healing practice offering an array of services that increase wellness through the mind-body-spirit connection (http://SpiritualSpectra.com).

Judith Goedeke
The healing power of words compels Judith Goedeke to write. She strives to clarify, redirect, own up to, and celebrate life — and do damage control. Her poems appear in anthologies, literary journals, and River of Silver Sky. She is proud to serve as Poet Laureate of HopeWorks of Howard County. Judith collaborates with mental health professionals to use writing in therapeutic settings. She facilitates workshops that foster loving and courageous self-awareness, intentional living, and compassion.

Millie Grove
Millie Grove has loved literature since a young age and began writing poetry when she was 10. She currently lives in Ellicott City with her fiancé and two cats.

Jalisa Hardy
Minister Jalisa Hardy is a survivor, single mom of three young children, licensed minister, self-published author, global speaker, and Board-Certified Holistic Health Practitioner, residing in Glen Burnie, MD. She is known as the “Holistic Health Plug,” providing resources, tools and safe spaces for single moms going through divorce or other major transitions. Jalisa was featured in Women of The City and VoyageBaltimore magazine.

Aljaai Hoff
Aljaai Hoff is a Maryland-based artist inspired by anime and cartoons. In 2020, she attended Montgomery College to obtain her Associate of Fine Arts degree, and became a member of the Student Art League. In addition to drawing and painting, Aljaai has experience in graphic design through various internships.
Artists’ Bios

Arlita Joy Holland
Arlita Joy Holland is a survivor who’s been blessed with the gift of poetry. She writes to inspire those who struggle to rise out of the ashes of pain and suffering. She believes in the power of poetry and prays that her poems find their way into the hearts of those yearning to be free from the effects of sexual assault and domestic violence. The RiseUp! Poetry Project featured Arlita’s work in their three-volume anthology. Her poems have been published in two volumes of Dragonfly. In 2021 and 2022, she was the Highlighted Poet at Dragonfly The Poetry Reading and Gallery Walk.

Hilda Flike Jacobson
Hilda is a storyteller and multidisciplinary artist that strives to capture hard truths and love in its many forms through art. They work in several mediums, mainly gravitating toward drawing, painting, printing, and rug making, with the occasional poem being formed when visuals fail to capture a feeling. Their work revolves around the themes of gender and relationships, focusing on identity as it relates to the self and connections with those around you.

Renee Kalu
Renee Kalu is a marketing and communications professional with a passion for creating and re-creating for work and pleasure. She considers herself a hobby-artist and enjoys acrylic painting and incorporating mixed media (Nigerian fabrics and jewelry) in her pieces. Some of her artwork was first published in the 2021 edition of Dragonfly Arts Magazine. Renee lives in Frederick, MD, with her husband.

Helga Kidder
Helga Kidder lives in the Tennessee hills with her husband. When the muse rests, she plays tennis or peruses recipes for cakes. Her poems have been published in Conestoga Zen, Poetry South, American Diversity Report and in the anthology, Carrying the Branch: Poets in Search of Peace. She has five collections of poetry, Wild Plums, Luckier than the Stars, Blackberry Winter, Loving the Dead, which won the Blue Light Press Book Award 2020, and Learning Curve, poems about immigration and assimilation.

Ari King
Ari King is a poet and prose writer based in Maryland. She is deeply inspired by the wisdom nature has to offer and often uses the natural world as a lens through which to examine uncomfortable truths. Ari enjoys spending time observing the flow of the earth and considering how the wildness ‘out there’ reflects the wildness within us all.

Anna Kline and Judas Lackey
Anna (they/them) and Judas (he/him) are queer trans art students who grew up exploring their genders and sexuality through art. They both describe their genders through non-traditional means, with Anna using plant-based imagery and Judas using themes related to animals and beasts. The name “Flora and Fauna” describes the differences in their identities and similarities in experience. They continue to explore similar themes in their studies and personal artwork.

Miriam Laufer
Miriam Laufer works as a technical writer and has taught college writing at Howard Community College.
ARTISTS’ BIOS

Jeana Lovelace
Jeana is a trauma survivor. She has used writing to express emotions. She has published poems in "One Voice," she also, published a book on Amazon, Walking Through Trauma, and has published in Dragonfly Arts Magazine. She is a retired nurse who volunteers for a hospice and is involved in various workshops in HopecWorks.

William Lowe
William Lowe teaches literature, Asian studies, and ESL composition at Howard Community College in Columbia, Maryland. William is a poet, fiction writer, and musician. He has published poems and short stories in several journals, including Cold Mountain Review, Appalachian Broadsides, Silhouette, Wakenings, New River Free Press, The Muse, Welter, Little Patuxent Review, Connections, Dragonfly, and Open Minds Quarterly.

Debora McCallum
Debora McCallum was born in Washington, DC, and has lived in Virginia and Maryland. She has traveled the world and is a retired staff photographer for NASA. Interested in the arts all her life, she is inspired by adventure, nature, and the wonders of the world - appreciating that we are all one. She loves trees, family, travel, history, and antiques. A gypsy at heart.

Caryn Mirriam-Goldberg
Caryn Mirriam-Goldberg, Ph.D., the 2009-13 Kansas Poet Laureate, is the author of 24 books, including How Time Moves: New & Selected Poems; Miriam’s Well, a novel; and The Sky Begins At Your Feet: A Memoir on Cancer, Community, and Coming Home to the Body. Founder of Transformative Language Arts, she is offers writing workshops, coaching, and collaborative projects at YourRightLivelihood.com, with Kathryn Lorenzen, Bravevoice.com with Kelley Hunt, and TheArtofFacilitation.net with Joy Roulier Sawyer. Connect with Caryn at CarynMirriamGoldberg.com.

Leilani Nance
Leilani is an Army veteran and local photographer who seeks to capture beauty in the small things. She hopes her work brings a positive experience to all who view it.

Marian O. Nance
Marian is a retired librarian who believes writing and art soothes the soul and are therapeutic. She believes that poetry and prose confront a personal truth and provokes needed conversations.

Lore Nissley
Lore Nissley is a poet and essayist living and working in Maryland. Her relationship with words drove her to earn a degree in English and Creative Writing at UMBC and to work in journalism. She later moved into nonprofit management and early childhood education, working to bring the love of words and literacy resources to our youngest learners. Lore is currently enjoying her newly empty nest and rediscovering the joy of writing her personal story. Her poetry was most recently published in 45 Magazine: Women’s Literary Journal.
ARTISTS’ BIOS

Michelle Petties
Michelle Petties is an author and speaker. Her memoir, Leaving Large – The Stories of a Food Addict, a category winner in The 2022 Memoir Prize for Books, features the award-winning essay, The Cake is in the Mail. Her memoir illustrates how events, experiences, and memories inform our beliefs, attitudes, and habits around food, eating, hunger, and everything else in life. Michelle teaches others how to find their food and personal truths during healing-through-writing-and-storytelling workshops.

Sandra Price
Sandra Price is a mother of three, grandmother, sister, friend, community volunteer, gardener, activist, book lover, anti-racist, survivor, and spiritual being who loves being outdoors in nature. She enjoys communicating her thoughts and experiences via the arts. Born in Washington, DC, in the 60s, growing up as a BIPOC/biracial woman wasn’t always easy but was certainly interesting. She loves music, poetry, live theatre, dance, travel, and family.

Greg Schuler
Greg is a soon-to-be-retired scientist who is rekindling his creative side. He enjoys drawing, painting, photography, and videography, and he is excited to see what new and exciting projects he can work on in his retirement.

Korellia Schneider
Korellia Schneider is a queer poet originally from Minneapolis, MN. She has dabbled in poetry since she was a teenager but has more recently been growing the courage to share her work. In her private time, she enjoys reading, traveling, and volunteering at a local cat shelter. She lives in Winnipeg, MB, Canada.

Kelli Smith
Kelli Smith is a Howard County native. Her creative process is her first language and the voice she uses to express her healing. Her artwork exists in multiple mediums, and she hopes that it will resonate with others and allow others to find their own creative process too.

Aissatou Sunjata
Aissatou is a retired Public/School Librarian K-12. She is also a Disabled American Army Veteran and Military Widow. A survivor of domestic abuse. She has been a poet most of her life. Now, embarking on her 63rd year of living, she enjoys listening to birds chirping, driving on rural roads in the south, and entertaining full time her Muse; assuring her with fountain pens filled and cream-unlined journal, she is only a metaphor away.

Barbara Weisser
Barbara Weisser is a retired librarian and educator who worked in adult education for many years, both volunteer and paid in different settings. She writes prose and poetry mostly about good and bad times she experienced. She says writing is very good for her spirit. It is a wonderful way to get things off her chest. And some of her humorous pieces just make her smile.
ARTISTS’ BIOS

Frances Wertimer
Frances Wertimer is a Baltimore-based multimedia artist originally from New York City, with roots in New Orleans as well. Her work is inspired by psychology, myth, spirituality, and the pursuit of justice.

M.E. Williams
M.E. is an educator, researcher, crafter, yogi, hiker, plant mom, advocate, and survivor. She was first published in Dragonfly in 2020, and her work seeks to support and empower other survivors as they navigate the many seasons of healing.

Chris Wood
Chris Wood is an analyst by day, spends most evenings cleaning up dog hair from the abundance of love she receives from her fur babies, and in between, she writes to balance her right brain from her left. She has a bachelor’s degree in accounting and serves as treasurer for the Chattanooga Writers’ Guild. Her work has appeared in several journals and publications, including Poetry Quarterly and the American Diversity Report. Learn more at chriswoodwriter.com

Ming Xu
Ming Xu, licensed acupuncturist, and founder of the Monterey Institute of Natural Medicine, moved to Maryland and started practicing Traditional Chinese Medicine in Columbia. Ming is also an artist; she does oil/acrylic paintings. Her artwork, “The Beauty,” won the 2nd place among 87 other paintings at the 2009 Art Competition in Seaside City Hall in Monterey, California. She lives in Ellicott City, Maryland with her family, which includes her two sons.
SUBMIT YOUR ART

Dragonfly
arts & transformative justice magazine

Poetry Photography
Sketch
Short Story
Mixed-media Sculpture Painting Prose

submission season
September 1, 2023 to January 31, 2024

WORKS

Please read our submission guidelines before submitting your work. Visit: https://hopeworksofhc.org/dragonfly/

Submit your work to: dragonfly@HopeWorksOfHC.org

Made possible by the Howard County Arts Council through a grant from Howard County Government
We Are HopeWorks.

Incorporated in 1978, HopeWorks of Howard County is a private nonprofit agency. HopeWorks’ mission is to support and advocate for people in Howard County affected by sexual and intimate partner violence and to engage the community in creating the change required for violence prevention.

We are proud of our strong tradition of service provision and survivors will always need the specialized care our dedicated staff provides on a daily basis. Critical also to our mission is engaging the entire community in the work of changing the conditions that allow sexual and intimate partner violence to occur in the first place. This part takes all of us. Sexual and intimate partner violence are not inevitable realities in our world.

To accomplish our mission, we use an anti-racist/anti-oppression analysis and framework; enabling us to address and decrease the root causes of sexual and intimate partner violence, as well as the systems that fuel sexism, racism, poverty, transphobia, health disparities, homophobia, ableism, genocide, xenophobia, and other forms of oppression.

We support and partner with others doing anti-racist/anti-oppression work, efforts to achieve healthier relationships and a world where each person is safe, valued and affirmed.

We all benefit when individuals are free to live self-determined lives without the threat of sexual and intimate partner violence – not just survivors. Parents, law enforcement, businesses, students, day care providers, doctors, nurses and teachers, men and boys benefit. Families and friends will all be better off without these threats.

Prevention takes an entire community working together – challenging and changing the beliefs, attitudes and culture that allow them to exist. And it takes hope. Hope builds momentum and momentum creates change...when we work together. Our community can be stronger and better and safer when we are all engaged in this work together.

WE ARE HOPEWORKS. EACH AND EVERY ONE OF US.

ADVOCACY SERVICES
- 24-Hour Helpline for callers seeking crisis counseling and referrals regarding sexual and intimate partner violence
- Providing comfort, support, and advocacy to survivors of sexual and intimate partner violence at Howard County General Hospital

CRISIS SHELTER AND TRANSITIONAL HOUSING
- Crisis shelter for victims and their children
- Transitional Housing
- Individual Case Management

COUNSELING FOR SURVIVORS OF SEXUAL AND INTIMATE PARTNER VIOLENCE
- Crisis appointments
- Individual and group counseling

LEGAL ASSISTANCE
- Brief advice, information and referrals for victims of intimate partner violence, sexual assault, stalking and child abuse
- Representation, consultation in peace & protective order matters, divorce, and family law proceedings
- Information and support through the Volunteer Legal Advocacy Project staffed at the District Court daily
- Criminal accompaniments to victims of domestic violence and sexual assault

ENGAGEMENT, EDUCATION, HEALING & AWARENESS PROGRAMS
- Workshops and Trainings at schools, faith communities, businesses, and civic organizations
- HopeWorks’ Youth Leadership Project: a service-learning program for teens ages 13 to 18
- The Our Voice Project: Survivors Peer-Led Support & Leadership Programs
- The Survivors’ Health Project addressing the long-term health consequences of trauma
- Arts-Based Programs to enhance wellness, build community and create change
- Self-care & Social Justice workshops for the public facilitating conversation, transformation and liberation
- Volunteer Opportunities
- Outreach and participation in community events such as school fairs, health fairs and awareness events

HopeWorks 24-Hour Helpline  410.997.2272